

iati International Aid Transparency Initiative

Who am I?

Maggie Lee

Regional Head - Asia Pacific, Europe & North Africa, Impact, Monitoring, and Reporting
WWF-International

- Formerly UNEP, Verra, Nestle, and Procter & Gamble
- Food and cosmetic scientist by training, conservationist by passion
- Key areas of environmental work: traceability, sustainable production and consumption, impact monitoring & data transparency
- Based in Hong Kong and Bangkok

What problem am I trying to solve?

- Conservation impact data has little alignment with social sustainability work in areas such as
  - Humanitarian
  - Disaster relief
  - Development
- How can we find the "lowest common denominator" for alignment of the definition of impact for all types of conservation projects?

What should the audience expect from me later?

About CanWaCH

- The Canadian Partnership for Women and Children's Health (CanWaCH) is a membership of about 100 NGOs, academic institutions, health professional associations and private companies.
- Our Mission: CanWaCH unites the expertise and commitment of Canadian organizations and individuals to advance the health and rights of women, children and adolescents globally.

CanWaCH's Project Explorer

- Data sharing and visualization tool of global health and gender equality projects with a Canadian connection
- Building on the work of IATI
- Supports learning, collaboration and collective impact

Upcoming Session

- Interactive discussion on data use
- Engaging users and community
